5.BRANDNAME CREATION

So why it's a Brand name so important?

Having a unique brand name can have a huge impact on your business and can sometimes make or break a company if it's not considered correctly. A strong brand name can build customer recognition, stand out in a potentially competitive market, create customer loyalty and enhance credibility while at the same time bring memorability to avoid being easily forgotten. But for this to happen there are a lot of factors you must take into consideration, so to help with the thought process we have broken down some of those key steps and also included how you can go about creating one.

Be original

Your brand name should not try to emulate an existing established brand name but instead, set you apart from your competitors by showing your personality as a brand and highlighting your unique attributes. And this comes down to both creative thinking and consequently carrying out due diligence by checking your chosen name against those in the market sector, which we'll come to later.

Make it memorable

Finding a memorable brand name that your audience can remember for years to come. just in the way that Google and how over have made their Brand name part of the everyday language of many of their customers. However, this is not something that will happen overnight.

Future-proofed

Getting the name that resonates with your audience now, will enable it to transition with you through the key phases in your business' journey. So, although your brand name has to work for the now, you must consider how it'd live and breathe in many years to come, how it could evolve without losing its essence. Not taking this point into account can potentially pigeon hole your business, especially if you want to expand into new areas in the future.

User-Friendly

A name should be easy to pronounce and spell. A name without these qualities can potentially hinder the brand awareness and create frustration and annoyance between potential users or investors. Keeping a brand name short, to the point, and reducing the number of syllables is a good way to create a user-friendly name. Creating a name that is long and made up of multiple words can be fine when it's on a logo lockup, but you'll need to consider what happens to it when it becomes an URL, app icon, an Instagram account or even a hashtag. Lastly and something also to consider is that the Brand name might be shortened by your customers, if this was to happen would it still work?
